Assistant/Associate Professor – Faculty

The University of Alabama School of Law anticipates making several tenure-track faculty appointments to begin in the 2013-2014 academic year. We seek applications from entry-level candidates with excellent academic records and demonstrated potential for outstanding teaching and scholarly achievement. The Faculty Appointments Committee also welcomes applications from lateral candidates who possess outstanding academic credentials, including demonstrated teaching ability and a record of distinguished scholarship. We are interested in the following academic subject areas: civil procedure, complex federal litigation, criminal law and procedure, legal ethics, federal taxation (including basic federal income tax and upper level tax electives, including, but not limited to, corporate and partnership tax, international tax, taxation of nonprofits, tax policy, and the taxation of trusts, estates, and gifts). Most candidates will have a J.D. degree from an accredited law school. Also, exceptional candidates with an advanced degree, such as a Ph.D., with scholarly interests related to the law and involving interdisciplinary, jurisprudential, empirical, or social science work may be considered even without holding a law degree. The University of Alabama embraces and welcomes diversity in its faculty, student body, and staff; accordingly, the School of Law actively welcomes applications from persons who would add to the diversity of our academic community.

Salary, benefits, and research support will be nationally competitive. The School of Law will treat all nominations and applications as strictly confidential, subject only to the requirements of state and federal law. Interested candidates should apply online at facultyjobs.ua.edu. The positions will remain open until filled. Please refer any questions about the hiring process to Professor Andrew P. Morriss, Chair of the Faculty Appointments Committee for the 2013-2014 academic year (email: facappts@law.ua.edu)
The University of Alabama School of Law anticipates making several tenure-track faculty appointments to begin in the 2013-2014 academic year. We seek applications from candidates with excellent academic records and demonstrated potential for outstanding teaching and scholarly achievement. The Faculty Appointments Committee also welcomes applications from lateral candidates who possess outstanding academic credentials, including demonstrated teaching ability and a record of distinguished scholarship. We are interested in the following academic subject areas: civil procedure, complex federal litigation, criminal law and procedure, legal ethics, federal taxation (including basic federal income tax and upper level tax electives, including, but not limited to, corporate and partnership tax, international tax, taxation of nonprofits, tax policy, and the taxation of trusts, estates, and gifts). Most candidates will have a J.D. degree from an accredited law school. Also, exceptional candidates with an advanced degree, such as a Ph.D., with scholarly interests related to the law and involving interdisciplinary, jurisprudential, empirical, or social science work may be considered even without holding a law degree. The University of Alabama embraces and welcomes diversity in its faculty, student body, and staff; accordingly, the School of Law actively welcomes applications from persons who would add to the diversity of our academic community. Salary, benefits, and research support will be nationally competitive. The School of Law will treat all nominations and applications as strictly confidential, subject only to the requirements of state and federal law. Interested candidates should apply online at facultyjobs.ua.edu. The positions will remain open until filled. Please refer any questions about the hiring process to Professor Andrew P. Morriss, Chair of the Faculty Appointments Committee for the 2013-2014 academic year. (email: facappts@law.ua.edu)