

Yankees-Orioles Feed Hardball Habit

by Mike Lindquist and Doug Schoppert
 We were there to see baseball. There's nothing more relaxing (on a weekday night in Baltimore, at least) than sitting back, cold beer in hand, holding ten kosher hot dogs smothered in mustard and watching major league baseball under a night sky.
 Perhaps the only thing better is watching the New York Yankees destroy the Baltimore Orioles with an eight-hit, eight run fifth inning highlighted by seven straight singles. Or watching a rookie Yankee pitcher making his first major-league appearance best the legendary Jim Palmer. Or watching two Oriole pinch-hitters fail to push the tying run the final 90 feet in the bottom of the ninth.

 By now, as anyone who went to Baltimore earlier this week to watch the O's host an ungrateful Yankee squad can attest, Baltimore fans have developed a profound dislike of the Yankee pinstrips (not to mention their road grays, for that matter). This was also evident to players like Reggie Jackson, who wore a batting helmet to right field in the late innings Tuesday, as well as to reliever Rich Gossage, who caught a facefull of beer on his way back to the dugout after a particularly unspectacular inning.

 And when the abuse was not physical, it was verbal. "Munson's a woman," cried a red-neck voice from the upper reaches of upper deck. "New York sucks" was another popular refrain of a crowd whose anger at the invading World Champions occasionally spilled over to brawls in the stands and parking lots.
 The Oriole bench even attempted to vent their multitudinous frustrations by tentatively "rushing" onto the field after the erratic Gossage brushed back and subsequently hit error-prone third-baseman Doug DeCinces in the eighth inning on Monday. DeCinces couldn't get out of the ball's way fast enough in the field, either, committing three miscues in the two-game series.

 If the fans had little patience the Yankees, they displayed almost less with their own Orioles. After every every DeCinces error, the crowd (?) started chants of "We want Brooks" with less nostalgia than bitterness.
 The less-than-overflow crowds were treated to a new Oriole "attraction" after the fifth inning of each game in the form of a hyperactive midget who sweeps the bases before stripping down to a tiny Superman costume to the perverse delight of the crowd. But not even the frustrations of thumbing through the Orioles program in a futile search for rosters, first names, ages, heights, weights, or any stats at all on any of the players could put a damper on the bustards of Bomber fans—from Georgetown Monday, from the Big Town on Tuesday—who made the trip. But the top-forty "hits" which blared from the PA between innings came close.

 We and a combined 37,000 people put up with all the trashy window-dressings to see a couple of games. And, as usual, it was well worth the hassle (and don't let anyone tell you Baltimore is just an hour's drive from D.C.).

side in the top of the first, and a Munson throw sailing 40 feet wide of second base, and Sparky Lyle almost, but not quite, blowing a three-run lead in the bottom of the ninth.
 And, as usual, we came away more addicted than ever.

GU Sweeps U. Va Crew

 Slicing through the waves down in Charlottesville, the Georgetown University Rowing Association swept the University of Virginia, with all three lightweight crews emerging victorious. The heavyweights did not row in the competition.
 The Hoya shells took to the water under the supervision of Lightweight Coach John Ciernieski, who reportedly told his minions that he didn't expect them to win against the rival Cavalier oarsmen. Others dismissed this as being in character. "He's a very demanding coach," said Varsity Lightweight bowman Dave McAneny. "He's hated, but respected," added Bill Burke, half jokingly.
 In any event, the oarsmen proved their mentor wrong, as the Junior Varsity eights started things off by opening a 1/2-length lead over the Virginian shell, and holding it for the duration of the race.
 The lightweight fours also won, with Coxswain Pat Sheehan directing his second race of the day, as they built an early lead off of a strong start, and extended it through the duration of the race. With the result never in doubt, the fours cruised to a five-length victory.
 In dramatic fashion, the Varsity lightweights came back from an early scare, trailing by a length at the 1000 meter mark, to sprint early, at the 500 meter flag, overtaking their southern foes, and eventually pulling out the win going away, gaining open water just as the finish flashed past.
 Next week Georgetown's crew journeys to Philadelphia to do battle against the likes of Ithaca, King's Point, and Drexel. They will then return to Washington the next weekend to race in the D.C. Regatta before heading back up to Philly on May 12 to compete in the season-capping Dad Vails.

Lacrosse Falls, 23-1, In Season Finale

by David Dailey
 Georgetown's Men's Lacrosse team wrapped up their season Wednesday on a sour note as they fell to defeat at the hands of St. Mary's College by the score of 23-1.
 The game was never in doubt as the visitors rolled to a 7-0 first period lead over the outclassed Hoyas. St. Mary's sharp, precise stickwork enabled them to control the ball for over 70 percent of the game, dealing 52 shots at Georgetown goalie Kevin Murray. Murray's fine play in the goal kept the Hoyas from being embarrassed worse as he turned away 20 St. Mary's shots. Backup goalie Tim von Gal added 3 saves to the tally.
 The only highlight of the game for Georgetown came at the very end when attackman Jack Seaman took a pass from Tim Rice and fired a vicious bullet past the stunned St. Mary's goalie with only one second left on the clock, saving the Hoyas from being shut out.

 And so ended another dismal season for the Hoya lacxmen, who finished with a record of 0-9. Injuries plagued the team throughout the entire year, the latest casualty being George Lodge who was sidelined for the final game with an injured foot.
 The future looks bright for the team, though, providing they stay healthy, as they will lose only one starter to graduation in Captain Lee Albanese. The entire starting defense and attack (?) will return next year with the hope that the past season's experience will provide the team with some long awaited victories.
 The Annual Men's and Women's Lacrosse Banquet will be held Tuesday at 6:30 P.M. in the New South Faculty Lounge.
