

The University of Minnesota Law School
Corporate Institute
Forum on Taxation and Regulation

invites you to attend a

Perspectives on Taxation Lecture Series

presentation,

On the Why and How of Wealth Tax and Accrual Income Tax Reforms

by

Prof. David Gamage
Indiana University Maurer School of Law

Friday, January 29, 2021
12:00 – 1:00 p.m.

On Zoom

Registration is required but free at
<https://umn.zoom.us/meeting/register/tJUod-ugqz0pGdZsFNwWmN7B53tXBkfYK5-W>

(1 hour CLE and CPE applied for)

About our topic:

Drawing from his own materials to be distributed to attendees, our speaker will argue that either wealth tax or accrual income tax reforms are needed to fix the ways in which the existing tax system is broken with respect to mega-millionaires and billionaires. He will also describe his tax reform work for designing and implementing wealth tax or accrual income tax reforms at the U.S. state level.

About our speaker:

David Gamage is a Professor of Law and a scholar of tax law and policy at the University of Indiana Maurer School of Law. He has written extensively on tax and budget policy at both the U.S. state and federal levels, as well as on tax theory, fiscal federalism, and the intersections between taxation and health care. Prof. Gamage has authored or co-authored over fifty scholarly articles and essays as well as a casebook, Taxation: Law, Planning, and Policy.

From 2010 through 2012, Prof. Gamage served as special counsel to the U.S. Department of the Treasury, Office of Tax Policy. In that position, he administered the individual income tax portfolio of the Treasury Department's Tax Legislative Counsel, and he oversaw the drafting of all individual income tax regulations and executive branch initiatives related to the individual income tax. Since 2012, Prof. Gamage has served on a tax reform commission for the state of California. He regularly advises other state and federal policymakers regularly on tax and health policy.